

Family affairs get terribly mixed up in large cities, where, for one reason or another, woman so often abdicates the prerogatives of maternity to escape its duties. New York is especially prolific of difficulties between the mothers who turn out their babies, and the nurses who are attached to the little orphans. A case is now before the courts of that city, in which Mrs. Elizabeth Clark sues for the recovery of her three-year-old son, Frank Clark, from the possession and control of James Hoey and wife. It seems that Mrs. C. had employed them to nurse her baby, and as they had no baby of their own, they became very fond of little Frank, and the child very naturally bestowed his affections upon them. But when he grew to be a pretty and interesting boy, no means a troublesome three-year-old, Mrs. Clark concluded to reclaim him. The Hoeyes drew up a big bill of expenses, and charged, and believed that Mrs. Clark should refund to pay it. It would have all the force and effect of a foreclosed mortgage and enable them to keep Frank with them. A writ of habeas corpus was served on Hoey, but he tore it up and refused to make any return. A citation for contempt was next served, and he tore that up, too. Finally he was brought into court by an attachment served by a stout bailiff, and then Mrs. Hoey appeared with Frankie and explained matters. The child's expressions of delight on meeting the prisoner elicited the sympathy of the court, and the cold, shy way in which he turned from his mother's overtures to clinging to the Hoeyes made a decided impression against her natural claims. As the case was postponed for a further hearing, Hoey took the child in his arms, saying, "Frankie's mine till Friday, anyhow," and walked out with the little fellow hugging and kissing him joyfully, while the mother followed weeping hysterically. It will not do for parents to rely too much upon the saying that "blood is thicker than water."—[St. Louis Republican.]
